Thumbs up for this view. Never seen one like this before. My best bet this flight came from the west or south. No matter what bad things can be said about NYC it would be reckoned among the best cities of all times. Yes I can agree that a lot has changed negatively which are also attributed to the effects of immigration but the great blueprint of a metroplis remains.I've had the opportunity to visit NYC to experience what's it like living there.I Love NYC!

Bryan Jeske 7 hours ago

Excellent video with a really good view of Manhattan and surrounding area !!! What an amazing metropolis !!! I flew over Manhattan on a beautiful sunny day in 2014 returning to Toronto from Antigua and had an excellent view approaching the mainland from the Atlantic Ocean and seeing the Statue of Liberty and then the Manhattan metropolis and then continuing north-west.It was a beautiful sight !!! Many people think that Manhattan and Ellis Island area is the doorway to America.

Large buildings are built with the wealth that Americans earn but never receive because of the corrupt banking system. Money restricts resources. Get rid of money and let all have the right to live.

John Mulzoff 1 day ago

This may be 1 of the most beautiful & scenic views of New York City ever captured by ether a passenger or crew. However they caught something else as well. Did anybody see the UFO traveling at extremely high speed at around 4:21 into the video. It's traveling at extremely high speed in the opposite direction & there's no way in the world that it's a bird if by some chance that's what the powers that be would like us ALL to believe. Theres no way in the world that a bird can fly that fast & although I of all people realize that 1s perception of speed can be exaggerated augmented distorted & perhaps even enhanced a little simply because both the plane & the Unidentified Craft are traveling in opposite directions there's still no way anyone could mistake it for a bird. If anything I thought it looked a bit like a 50 caliber round esorcisly because of the distinct glint that it made as it blew by. However I honesty don't think anybody would be crazy enough to go busting shots off over the city in broad daylight even despite the fact that it's New York & that some New Yorkers have themselves a reputation for being either a little violent or a little crazy!! LMAO

MAURICIO RUIZ UFO CHANNEL 1 day ago

At the 4:20 minute mark a strange fast white object zooms by at incredible speed! I do believe we have a UFO captured on video. Other than that, what else could it have been? A single white oval bird? Hard to accept it as a bird. My opinion observation of course.

OSTARAEB4 1 month ago

I've flown this approach quite a few times when I lived there and I always hoped for this approach (the River visual) which is the best approach and why I love flying into LaGuardia(LGA) This approach is truly amazing especially in May, or October or November when the weather tends to get crystal clear. You get to see about 70-80% of the city as you fly up the mouth of the Bay, the Hudson and see the amazing skyscrapers before hooking over The Bronx or lower Westchester for this Runway 22 landing. Sometimes the Expressway visual is where they fly you over Brooklyn and into Queens for a direct fly in over the roofs onto Runway 4, or fishhook you over the old world's Fair grounds and Citifield stadium to bring you into Runway 31. Manhaatan will be on your left side and although impressive, you don't get as close and bird's eye spectacular view as the one featured here.

We landed in JFK and should have got the transfer bus to Newark. But we jumped on the bus to la guardia. We were to go to Phoenix. The United girl at LGA told us we were at the wrong airport but no worries, there was a United flight to Phoenix from there in one hour and we were welcome to get on it. We did! How relaxed it all was. In the UK you get stung for every mistake....forget to print out your ticket, wrong size case, wrong spelling of name etc. You get charged extra at every point. Mind you that trip to Phoenix was in 1989 so maybe things have tightened up. Great video.

Normal approach to RWY 22 (its a right hand traffic pattern) when entering the NYC terminal area from the south. North along the west side of Manhattan and the Bronx (Downwind Leg), then a right turn east across the north side of the Bronx (Base leg), and then another right turn south (final approach) down to the runway. That rwy uses a right hand pattern to keep clear of the traffic going in and out of JFK which is about 10 minutes away. LGA is on the north side of Queens and JFK is on the south side of Queens. The NYC terminal area is very busy with 4 airports within 20 miles of each other (KLGA, KJFK, KEWR, KTEB)

13 Nice view. As often and I fly into LGA on business, I never get tired of this view. How lucky that the different approach patterns to LGA all take you right over the city. This is one of the best ones, crossing over the very bottom of the island and flying up the Hudson -- basically the reverse route that Sully flew when he landed in the river. Some days NY Approach will have you make that jog to the east a little further south so that you can see all of lower Manhattan if you're sitting on the right hand side of the plane, flying right over the Hudson past the Bronx. The view if you do that after dark on a clear night is just amazing. Thanks for posting!

Pretty great view of Manhattan island.

I used to frequently fly in and out of La Guardia. Favorite landing approach was when runway 04 was active: would usually fly south on the NJ side of Hudson River, providing a spectacular view of the entire Manhattan skyline from GW Bridge to Battery, left turn to line up on runway 04 just south of Statue of Liberty with an equally spectacular view of the Battery and bridges leading downtown from Brooklyn. It was like getting a three-minute Circle Line tour from the air. I ALWAYS requested left-side window seats when I knew the wind was from the north at La Guardia.

Christopher Stevenson 9 months ago

Actually the plane flew directly over the area, so a window view would not have been possible.

Steven S 7 months ago

As of 17 years ago those towers are gone dude.

But if you noticed, the new building 1WTC is visible in the shot around 1:36

Christopher Stevenson 7 months ago

Where are they? Are you being rude? Its rude to pretend you don't know what happened to them.

Christopher Stevenson 7 months ago

Unless you really didn't know the world trade center was twin towers.

Steven S 7 months ago

You must live under a pretty big rock not to know about the 9/11 attacks and the collapses of the twin towers. That, or you're trolling and I have taken the bait hook line and sinker.

Dirty airplanes have a way of raising concerns about the quality of maintenance in other areas. The classic case of that was Eastern Airlines, who towards its end had a fleet of planes that looked tired, tattered and worked to death.

sjoldtimer 6 months ago

Back in the 70s, I flew quite often with Air Florida (it was their B737 that crashed into the icy Potomac after takeoff from Washington Reagan due to icing). They had a unique fleet of hand me down aircraft because of their acquisition of various regional carriers just after deregulation. Everything from DC-3s (from Providence-Boston Airways..PBA) to Boeing 737s (maybe even larger jets, I don't recall). Once I was on a Martin 404 from Sarasota to Miami and I remember engine cowling and wing area around the engines being painted black....it just looked weird because the rest of the aircraft was unpainted except for red along the windows and the turquoise Air Florida logo. I finally figured out that the black area around the engines was to help disguise the oil leaks. I did get to ride on some iconic planes with Air Florida though....same trip, another day...an original Fairchild F-27. If I recall correctly, the interior still had some leftovers from Allegheny, or some other regional airline that had purchased the plane in the 60s.

dave boydell 6 months ago

Good old shitty American upkeep. Everything's about the fucking dollar. I would feel much safer flying on British, Canadian, German or Aussie carriers.

J.R. Productions 2 months ago

Everything in NY is dirty shit, even the planes.

Anthony Boarman 3 weeks ago

Yeah I flew on Eastern Airlines. The plane did look old and needed a paint job. Made me concerned about them maintaining their planes.

Paris is an even bigger shithole than NYC. You can still smell the medieval piss & shit in the streets, the buildings all look like they're crumbling into dust and are covered in black plague mold. And worst of all, there's French people everywhere, ewww....

Interesting how the area between downtown and midtown Manhattan looks (somewhat) residential from the air.

Tom S. 9 months ago

It is residential .. Chelsea, East Village, West Village, SoHo, Tribeca, Gramercy Park, Murray Hill, \u2013\u2013\u2013 are mostly residential!

Lawrence Westby 8 months ago

The bedrock below Manhattan is at its shallowest in the downtown and midtown areas, that is why the skyscrapers are built in those areas. Tall buildings need the support of bedrock either by digging sub basements to the rock or by driving pilings down to the rock. Smaller building can be built on foundations supported by soil.

Daniel Noriega 5 months ago

Manhattan is mostly residential, I would say that only those buildings around world trade center and around Times Square are purely offices. Rest of it, commercial ground floor, (optional) offices 2nd and 3rd floor, and residential on the upper floors 19 1 1 @daniel, What is wrong with you. Is your life so miserable that you must always make comments about Trump even more than a year after the election? DO you have that much hate in you that you can't let things go? My god, you are pathetic.

daniel buczynski 8 months ago

19 1 1 Doesn't have anything to do with the election. It's an iconic airplane. One of the few 757s with RR engines, besides the 757 is one of the best looking airplanes out there :). I couldn't care less about the owner itself. Now, sissyboi, have you figured out which bathroom to use?

Twenty20 Entertainment, Ltd. 8 months ago

4 1 1 daniel buczynski nice catch!

Christopher Stevenson 8 months ago

2 1 1 There are plenty of 757s with RR engines. Its not rare. American had quite a few of them. BA, Condor, UPS... where do I stop?

Dave Thompson 7 months ago

1 1 1 Okay we don't need to talk like that to fellow aviation buffs. No one would sit and watch an airport approach pattern for 10 minutes and 6 seconds if they didn't have a lot in common with you. So let's all take a deep breath and just celebrate our common love for airplanes and flying! :D

I've flown Cessnas almost my entire life. I've seen more birds go by than you can imagine. They can almost turn on a dime and get out of way. I don't recall ever hitting one but have had a few close calls. It's just a part of the flight experience. Flying small planes has a similar statistical element of danger as riding motorcycles. You must be on top of your game the entire flight.
